

Quiz: It's the lack of thought that counts: Ethical Decision Making in Dual Relationships

- Which of the following is a dual relationship that happens by complete accident?
 - Circumstantial multiple roles
 - Personal and professional role shifts
 - Shifts in professional roles
 - Structured multiple professional roles
- Which of the following is a dual relationship that most likely happens between supervisors and supervisees?
 - Personal and professional role shifts
 - Predatory professional
 - Shifts in professional roles
 - Structured multiple professional roles
- Which of the following is a dual relationship that includes sexual behavior?
 - Personal and professional role shifts
 - Predatory professional
 - Shift in professional roles
 - Structured multiple professional roles
- The most common type of complaint against rural therapists is:
 - Going into business with a client
 - Nonsexual dual relationships
 - Poor quality of service
 - Sexual dual relationships
- What kind of dual relationship is when a former client and therapist become part of the same social group?
 - Circumstantial multiple roles
 - Personal and professional role shift
 - Shift in professional roles
 - Structured multiple professional roles
- More than 50% of therapists cited for dual relationships complaints have engaged in a formal ethical decision making process.
 - True
 - False
- In ethical decision making, the therapist should consider themselves as someone who is affected by the decision.
 - True
 - False
- In the ethical decision making process, all of the steps can be completed before acting.
 - True
 - False
- Which of the following factors contributes to therapist educators not promoting deeper thinking about dual relationships?
 - Early career therapists grasp concrete rules better until they face more nuanced cases
 - There are not many cases where therapists are punished for dual relationships
 - There is not much discussion about dual relationships in therapist education
 - All dual relationships are unethical
- Unprofessional conduct is a legal statute that includes unethical dual relationships.
 - True
 - False